

URGENT ACTION

FEARS FOR FEMALE ACTIVIST HELD INCOMMUNICADO

Li Qiaochu, an active defender of the rights of women and workers, was taken away by police in Beijing on 16 February 2020. Detained in an unknown location, her arrest is suspected to be related to her activism against gender violence and the fact that her partner, Xu Zhiyong, attended an informal gathering of lawyers and activists in Xiamen in December 2019. Without access to her family or a lawyer of her choice, there are grave concerns that Li Qiaochu is at risk of torture or other ill-treatment.

Dear Director Wang,

I am writing to express my concern for Li Qiaochu, who was taken away by police in Beijing on 16 February 2020. Her family has not been informed about the charges she is being held under, and they have not been provided with her detention notice.

Li Qiaochu is a well-regarded labour rights researcher and has been a peaceful advocate against gender-based violence for many years. Her partner, Xu Zhiyong, was one of the many lawyers and activists who attended an informal gathering in Xiamen in December 2019. It seems that Li Qiaochu's own peaceful activism, and close association with other activists, is the sole reason for her current detention.

On 31 December 2019, Li was summoned by the police and held in the Beijing Public Security Bureau for 24 hours. During her detention, police reportedly refused to give her adequate medical care. As most of the questioning related to Xu Zhiyong, Li Qiaochu decided to reveal the police's treatment of her online, calling for increased public attention for others detained in relation to the gatherings in Xiamen.

No information about Li Qiaochu's whereabouts have been shared with her family members, who worry that, without access to a lawyer of her choice, she is at serious risk of torture and other ill-treatment.

It is also distressing to learn that Li Qiaochu was diagnosed with depression in recent months. Without access to regular and adequate medication, there are real concerns for her mental and physical wellbeing.

I therefore call you to:

- Immediately and unconditionally release Li Qiaochu, unless there is sufficient, credible and admissible evidence that she has committed an internationally recognised offence and is granted a fair trial in line with international standards.
- Ensure that Li Qiaochu has regular, unrestricted access to family and lawyers of her choice and is not subjected to torture and other ill-treatment.
- Allow her prompt, regular and unrestricted access to medical care on request, or as necessary.

Yours sincerely,

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Li Qiaochu (李翘楚), born in 1991, is a feminist and researcher on labour issues. Li graduated from the School of Labour and Human Resources at Renmin University of China.

Li has long been involved in issues concerning equal rights for workers, women and other members of Chinese society. Her research has covered topics such as policies on social protection for retired workers. When Beijing authorities cleared and evicted the “low income population” in 2017, Li worked with volunteers to compile and disseminate information about the most affected communities, in order to help the expelled migrant workers find new jobs and affordable alternative accommodation. Li also actively took part in various national #MeToo campaigns. She compiled data, drafted reports and posted messages online of her support for the movement.

In June 2019, Li was diagnosed with depression and was put on regular medication. However, this did not stop her from her activism. With the outbreak of COVID-19, Li again volunteered to help, both online and offline, with epidemic prevention in small communities. She distributed face masks to sanitation workers and guided pregnant women from affected communities to help each other out. Having observed the lack of gender perspective, especially with respect to prevention of gender-based violence in some hospitals’ practices, she immediately worked with a group of volunteers to set out recommendations.

As a result of Li’s activism, she has often been harassed by the police. Beginning in early December 2019, public security officers were stationed outside her house, monitoring her on her way to and from work, which seriously contravened her privacy and civil rights.

Since 26 December 2019, police across the country have been summoning or detaining participants in an informal gathering of lawyers and activists held in Xiamen earlier that month. Dai Zhenya, Ding Jiayi and Zhang Zhongshun are just three of the many participants detained, and are currently being held under residential surveillance at a designated location unknown to their families.

Residential surveillance in a designated location is a measure that, under certain circumstances, enables criminal investigators to hold individuals for up to six months outside the formal detention system in, what can amount to a form of secret incommunicado detention. When held without access to legal counsel of their choice, their families or others, suspects placed under this form of “residential surveillance” are at risk of torture and other ill-treatment. This form of detention has been used to curb the activities of human rights defenders, including lawyers, activists and religious practitioners. Activists and human rights defenders continue to be systematically subjected to monitoring, harassment, intimidation, arrest and detention.
